Anthropology, with its broad comparative approach, is in a strategic position to contribute to the identification and resolution of many of the problems, both local and global, that challenge society today. The Department of Anthropology offers programs leading to both undergraduate (Bachelor of Arts) and graduate (Master of Arts, Doctor of Philosophy) degrees. Students graduating with a BA in Anthropology usually continue for the MA or PhD degree if they are interested in working as anthropologists. Undergraduate students can select one of four concentrations for the BA.

The Department of Anthropology is a pioneer in the field of Medical Anthropology. We highlight this expertise in our graduate program, which focuses on Medical Anthropology and Global Health.

Undergraduate and graduate students in anthropology study with internationally recognized faculty who are leading researchers in such areas as illegal drug use, child well-being, HIV, the culture of science, reproductive health, and other areas in the forefront of contemporary health challenges. The faculty work across the globe, conducting competitively funded research in pursuit of important research questions.

Both undergraduate and graduate students can obtain the Certificate in Global Health in conjunction with their anthropology degree.

Departmental Certificate in Global Health

The Certificate in Global Health is the centerpiece of the Framework for Global Health, a program made up of faculty members from departments across the Case Western Reserve University campus. Undergraduate and graduate anthropology students in the certificate program will be grounded in global health issues by a core course (INTH 301/INTH 401) that introduces them to key concepts and vocabulary and facilitates communication across disciplines.
